

To be divorced, a Judgment of Divorce will need to be signed by a Supreme Court Justice. There are two ways for this to happen: Either (1) Your attorney, working with you, negotiates with your spouse's attorney, and a settlement is reached on all the issues involved in a divorce, and all of those terms are included in the Judgment of Divorce, or (2) You and your spouse, through your attorneys, cannot agree on a settlement, and the matter goes to Trial before a Supreme Court Justice. Your attorney would represent you and present testimony and evidence to the Court. The Supreme Court Justice would then make a decision based on the evidence, and incorporate that decision in the Judgment Of Divorce.
